Displayed on this map is a cartographic representation of what was found within the bank and shore zones. Although in real life the bank zone consisted of varying widths and elevations, and the shore zone consisted of varying elevations, within this map the bank results are represented by a line that ends polygon feature and the shore zone results are represented by a polygon feature consisting of the feet backward from the water's edge. These features are represented on a planar surface and are displayed over an aerial image that is distorted. Although most measurements were collected within the aerial image, the polygon real distance from the water's edge is not accurately depicted over extreme elevation changes.
